Interamerican Council names Escotet director

Miguel A. Escotet, a research scholar and visiting professor at FIU, has been elected the first executive director of the Interamerican University Council for Economic and Social Development.

The council was formed last year in Washington, D.C., to promote cooperation and communication between universities in the Americas.

The executive council meeting at which Escotet was selected was held in Kingston, Jamaica, and was presided over by FIU President Gregory B. Wolfe, who is the founding president of the organization.
